

that he renewed acquaintance with several of the original committee on these revived occasions such as Donnie MacDougal, Johnny Smith, Tommy Ness, Alastair Ogilvie, Ishbel Macleod and Anna MacDougal, to whom he says he is still owing an apology as he didn't recognise her due to the fact she was looking so young!

He said: 'After all these decades I derive as much pleasure as ever from meeting my old school friends, and I thoroughly recommend the breakfast reunion enjoyed by those who stay overnight at the hotel.'

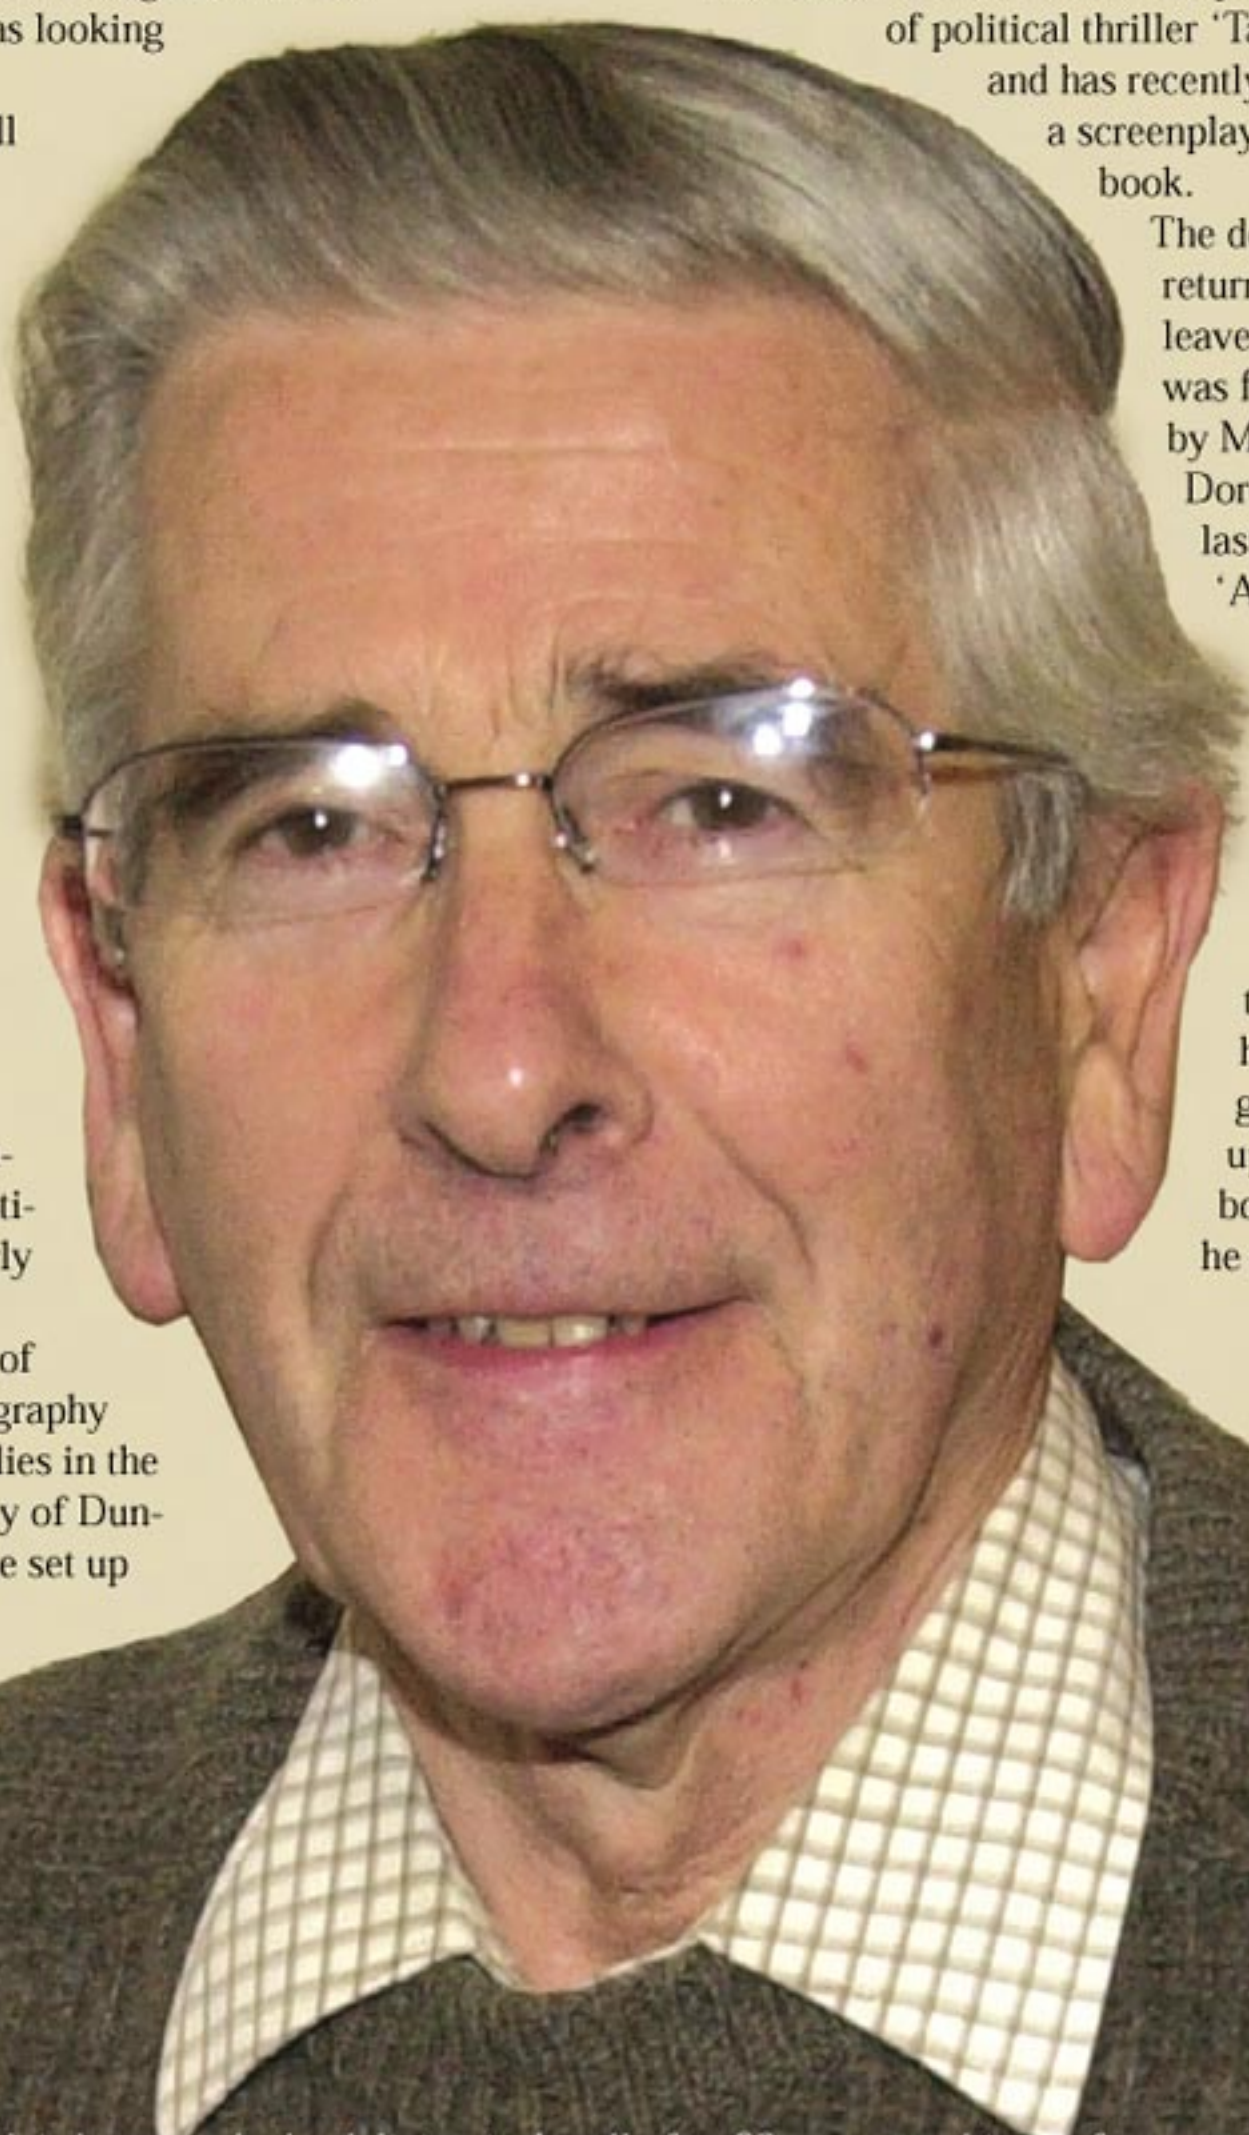

After six years teaching in Lochgilphead, Malcom moved on to posts in many exotic locations on four continents. Taking early retirement from his post as Head of Economics, Geography and Modern Studies in the Education Faculty of Dundee University, he set up his own English Language

Summer School, which drew students from every country of Europe as well as Japan and Korea. Malcolm also represented St Andrew's West on Fife Regional Council and was a parliamentary candidate for both Westminster and Europe.

The father-of-three is also the proud author of political thriller 'Task Force', and has recently completed a screenplay of his first book.

The decision to return to Argyll and leave St Andrew's was finally made by Malcolm when Dorothy died last February.

'Although I have many friends in St Andrew's, there was really nothing else to keep me there, and it has been so good to catch up with everybody back here,' he said.
