

Liosachs watched on with pride as the first stones were laid for the foundations of their new heritage museum. The building will be the largest development in the island's history. The architect for the project is Benderloch's Shauna Cameron.

The contract for the museum has been awarded to Appin's Stuart Carmichael, whose builders are on site, and the work is expected to be finished before the end of September.

Many see the museum as the perfect to discover and retain much of Lismore's fascinating history.

Build

Some original Comann Eachdraidh members at the site with builder Stuart Carmichael and Tony Perkins and museum project manager Tony Perkins.

