

THE INNER Hebridean islands can claim to have some of the most spectacular scenery in Europe, if not the world.

These beautiful and peaceful places welcome the global community but are often overlooked by their neighbours in Lorn, who perhaps seek a holiday abroad.

But these diverse and impressive lands simply can't be ignored as they offer a wide range of activities.

Mull is not only is it an interesting and busy island in its own right, with unrivalled access to Scotland's finest wildlife, it opens the doorway to the holy Isle of Iona, which is steeped in religious history.

Gigha is unique in that it is community owned and, as a result, its community is thriving. However, it still serves as a great escape from the hustle and bustle of town life.

The Isle of Islay boasts some of the most glamorous beaches and an array of wildlife but is perhaps most famous for its extensive whisky production.

Or take a two-day trip round the Isle of Skye which, with the largest landmass of the Inner Hebrides, has lots to see and do including some of the most picturesque walks in the country.

Despite the great differences in each island, the Inner Hebridean islands offer one thing in common – welcoming people and great craic!
