

stibility

and small, aquatic invertebrates. Being very tolerant of man, it is hardly surprising that Mallards are so successful. They have proven to be very adaptable to local conditions, quickly learning to exploit new food sources provided by people, such as the regular grain hand-out previously provided for Oban's herd of Mute swans in winter.

